

What is there for God to fill, if you are “up to the brim” already?

“The tax collector stood some way off”..... a kind of social distancing of the day I suppose, but there was probably more to it. “Their sort and our sort don’t mix”, even in the Temple, it seems, or perhaps especially there!

All of us in the Judeo-Christian tradition know the truth revealed in the early verses of Genesis, that we are made in the image and likeness of God, yet how conveniently this truth can be - not denied exactly - but “laid aside”, as we can revel in (rather than lovingly address) factions and divisions. Jesus knew this too, and perhaps that is why he addresses a short but memorable parable of contrasts to make a point, and we hear it in this Sunday's Gospel.

Nancy Spiegelberg, author of “I’d like to ask God”, wrote this:

“Lord, I crawled across the barrenness to you with my empty cup, uncertain in asking any drop of refreshment. If only I had known you better, I’d have come running with a bucket.”

The key players in this Sunday's Parable are a Pharisee and a Tax Collector. Both of them are in the holy place, the Temple, the Jewish equivalent of you and I coming into this holy place to address our Lord in prayer. To use Nancy's image, the Pharisee comes with his bucket already full to the brim, eager to tell God all about it, as if God didn't know! His bucket is full of self, full of “me, me, and more me”. Such success! Such unrestrained pride in voicing his accomplishments! If only he'd taken Psalm 90 to heart: You sweep men away like a dream, like grass which springs up in the morning; in the morning it springs up and flowers, by evening it withers and fades.....make us know the shortness of our life!

But he has affirmed himself for all his good deeds and now he wants God to the same, thus he will go home self-satisfied. In contrast, the tax collector it seems, comes with an empty bucket, to continue Nancy's imagery; he comes with the great void that failure and regret can bring, he brings the ache of his past deception and sin, perhaps his cruelty and cheating. His “bucket-list” contains one item: a craving for mercy.

Back to the Pharisee: without doubt, being true to his belonging to that fellowship of Pharisees, he would have done many good actions in his time, perhaps even he had helped a poor family while en route to the temple that very day, while his counterpart may have been fining or evicting a poor widow for not paying her property tax. Pharisees were the “pillars of the temple”, so to speak. The Pharisee, called with all Jews to fast and tithe, has actually gone beyond what was required. Oh, all these good works I have done! The first century Pharisees distinguished themselves by their very high observance of their religion, going beyond the norm. This guy's conscience does not accuse him of any sins which require penance. Surely all this would make him the more honourable in the sight of God?..... “not like this tax collector here”.

But wait: this Pharisee has not bargained for the authenticity of the God whom Jesus reveals, the God who looks at the heart, while humans tend to judge by appearances. For all his good deeds, it is when he is inside the temple, as he begins to pray, that another side to this Pharisee is revealed. He passes from gratitude to God for who he is and what he has done, to comparing himself with the tax collector. His condescension towards his fellow temple-goer is remarkable. The tax collector does not even look at the Pharisee as he might have done, and said to God, “I'm sorry I'm not good like he is!” But the tax collector has no need to compare. He knew who he was in his own heart. He stands there in his emptiness and asks only for mercy.

His distancing is not only “social”: it reveals the two different understandings of the Divine. The tax collector's distance shows his feeling like a fish out of water in such a “holy” assembly. He knows what the “faithful” around him must be thinking: he is a man who doesn't work for the temple but for the Roman system, most likely dishonest and corrupt. He dares not to even look up from the floor, but beats his breast in acknowledgement of his sin and shame. He doesn't promise God anything; he can't give back what has taken from unknown people. His only hope is to throw himself on God's mercy, just as he is.

And it seems that this is all God needs and asks of us: we don't have to rehearse all our good deeds before God, he knows them already; we don't to take vainglory before him because of our talents and achievements, he has enabled us to do all we have accomplished anyway! As Psalm 139 muses: “It was you who created my inmost being.....my days were listed and determined even before the first of them occurred.”

The Pharisee's big mistake that day was to start comparing, because when you compare it's so tempting to subtly look down on others and to start saying without truly reflecting, There but for the grace of God... and similar sentiments which we should be very careful of expressing. What really matters is that we allow God the opportunity to come into our emptiness, our need. If we are pleased as punch with ourselves, believing we have the full-to-the-brim bucket, then what do we need God to fill? Perhaps that's why the Church has always called her children to a true and regular examination of conscience, not so that we humiliate ourselves by doing it, but so that we are led to a deeper self knowledge.

Nancy's Spiegelberg's sentiments are probably wisdom enough: when we come before God, we should come with our voids and our emptiness, rather than rehearsing our overflowing buckets of achievements: thus he can fill us, in places where we thought the emptiness would be permanent.

of the Rosary, Litany and Prayer to St Joseph will take place this Sunday 23 October at 4pm in Our Lady of Good Counsel, Broughty Ferry.
Please come and join us as we continue to honour Our Lady during this month. This will be the final Sunday after October Devotions this year and we will celebrate the Mysteries of Light, given to us by Pope Saint John Paul II.
There will be October Rosary on Monday and Wednesday this week at 12.30pm in the Cathedral, before the 1pm Mass.

Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament in Our Lady of Good Counsel: There was previously the tradition of having a period of adoration until 11am from after the 10am Mass in Our Lady of Good Counsel on Tuesdays. Perhaps we could restart this devotion, an extension of the Communion thanksgiving, beginning this Tuesday 25 October. I shall stay for the period and there will be a short Benediction at the end.

Father Tony also used to have a Mass with the Sacrament of Anointing on a Saturday morning, once a month I think. As Saturday Mass is now in the evening only, might we introduce this on another day? During a morning Mass? Or an evening Mass? Please let me know your thoughts.

Ecumenical Service this Sunday 23 October at St Aidan's at 6pm—everyone is welcome!

Warm spot at St James, Fort Street, Broughty Ferry, every Thursday from 10am until 2pm: all welcome for hot drinks; see the poster for more venues and details.

The Scottish Catholic Magazine: As this publication is not supplied on a sale or return basis, as the Catholic papers of old were, it might be best if you let me know if you would like to receive a copy; this will make it more economical for the parish.
