Three “Persons” into whose faces we can look when we want to see God

We are well used to political leaders and parties seeking to express their vision for the future and establishing their agendas for achieving it. In a sense, the Old Testament book of Deuteronomy could be similarly understood and appreciated. It was composed during a time of crisis in Israel’s history, though it recounts events and people of a much earlier era. It was intended to reflect the time and strike a path towards a better future. As such it is one of the most significant and influential contributions to biblical writing.

While some of its material is from the seventh century BC, it probably received its final form during the Babylonian exile (587-538BC). When the nation was on the verge of extinction, the Book presented Israel with the challenge of obedience to the only law which could restore them. Put bluntly, it challenged them thus: Choose life, or death! Deuteronomy offers a new pattern of life for a people who had lost sight of their original vision.

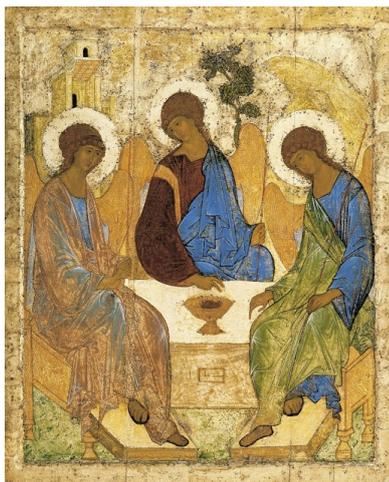

This pattern can only be found, this vision only restored by returning to the God whom they followed in their youth. The message is clear: there is no other, no other God, no other method or way of making progress in this life, than by following God, his word, his way. To Israel, as to us, it may seem old fashioned but, it seems, any other vision is deceptive. We have moved on since the days of Deuteronomy, not in finding another way, but in finding that the way of God is even more accessible for us than it was for the Israelites. For God does not keep his distance. Jesus is the expression of God’s gift of himself. One theologian put it this way: there is one thing you and I and God have in common: we all know what it like to be human—thanks to Jesus Christ.

Turning to the gospel we hear this Trinity Sunday, Saint Matthew records Jesus’ commission to those who are already involved in deep relationship with God that they reach out in ministry to those who do not yet know him and share the vision.

AND MAKE DISCIPLES

An old rabbinic prayer invites us to delight in the presence of the Triune God, the Trinity:

When I wander—You!
When I ponder—You!
Only You, You again, always You!
You! You! You!
When I am gladdened—You!
When I am saddened—You!
Sky is you! Earth is You!
You above! You below!
In every trend, at every end!
Only You; You again, always You!

We need so many images in order to put some form on the Divine One. But, thanks to the gift of the Spirit, we are also sharers in God’s divine mystery and we have God–attuned antennae, to perceive something of the eternal, the cosmic, in the finite things and people of our lives. What a wonderful God we have who gives us not one but three images to relate to, three forms of divine presence, three “persons” into whose faces we can look when we want to see God!
